KNOW THE WEATHER

Do tornadoes occur over the ocean? Why is it that seamen seldom encounter vicious tornadoes?

Tornadoes do occur over the ocean. However, they are usually smaller than their land - bred cousins and they last only a few minutes, in most cases. The reason you do not hear sailors talking of tornadoes is that they refer to what actually is a water tornado by an other name—waterspout.

The waterspout was once a great mystery to seafarers. Even today much of the ignorance which still prevails concerning tornadoes also prevails in connection with the waterspout. But it is pretty well established that waterspout do not suck ocean water up into their funnels (except for a few feet) as that they are, in reality, ocean going tornadoes.

Thus, the funnel, if it contains water, contains water from the cloud above, not from the ocean. And the old idea that a "spout" from the ocean was involved is completely erroneous.

Waterspouts, or ocean tornadoes are sometimes awesome sights, to be sure. But they seem to be less vicious than the midwestern plains type, and do little damage on the water.

VIRGINIA JUNIORS SHOW PUREBRED HEIFERS

Virginia FFA and 4-H club members exhibited 48 Angus, 61 Hereford, and 27 Shorthorn purebred heifers in the recently completed series of spring junior purebred heifer shows, says Arden N. Huff, 4-H livestock specilist at Virginia Polytechnic Institute.

The heifer projects and shows are sponsored annually for each breed by the Virginia Angus, Hereford, and Shorthorn Associations

Huff says the aim of the program is to encourage interested boys and girls on suitable farms to get, grow, and breed registered beef heifers.

By expanding the project, members can eventually own small herds of registered cattle.

Exhibitors of the top heifers in the spring shows are encouraged to exhibit their heifers also at the Virginia State Fair, in Richmond September 21-29. Premiums have been increased for this year's events for the following total offerings: Angus, $838; Hereford, $610 and Shorthorn, $494. The prize money is made available by both state and national breed associations.

THE PEACE CORPS.

The Peace Corps first found itself near an actuality when President Kennedy advocated it in his presidential campaign of the 1960's. After his election, progress was slow in its organization and a great deal of criticism was leveled on the effort.

Many of the Republicans claimed that the new agency would build another giant bureaucracy within our government. This may have helped prevent such a bureaucracy from being formed.

To the credit of both parties, the Peace Corps has become a bi-partisan agency. This has resulted from the good which they have accomplished and the praise of both Democrats and Republicans. Members who are considered as ultra-conservative, as well as those who are considered ultra-liberal, have joined in their praise of the work of the Peace Corps. The last peace of legislation concerning it passed in Congress by a vote of 315 to 70 It would seem that it is now well established and will be an agency no matter which Party is in power

What is the Pesce Corps accomplishing, if anything? That is best answered by the fact that in every country to which the Peace Corps has gone, everyone without exception has asked to double or triple their quota of Peace Corps volunteers. Many countries which borden the countries which now have Peace Corps members have requested for volunteers to come in to their country, also.

Members of the Peace Corps can teach those people values which no amount of money can buy or give

COMMENTS ON SPORTS

By PETE FRITCHIE

WASHINGTON, D. C.—The recent record-breaking track meet between the United States and Russia held at Stanford, California provides us with an interesting spectacle in sports nationalism.

It was the fourth such track meet between the two countries and because Russia and the United States dominate the track scene, this meeting is annually called the World Series of track.

The average American "knows" the Americans won the July meet in Stanford, U. S. newspaper headlines carried such type as: "U. S Wallops Russia In Track," or one which read: "U. S. Stars Rout Red Shirts."

That was all very fine and fitted in well with our national pride And in the track meet, the men's total scores were announced as United States— 128, Russia —107 It was a victory margin, according to all the wire service reports an practically all of the sports commentators, of 21 points.

One major service reported that the U. S. victory was the fourth in succession and that the margin was the largest margin of victory yet and the highest score U. S athletes had scored yet.

And that all sounds very good except for the fact that the total men and women's score in the track meet was Russia 173, the United States 169, or, in other words, the Russians won the comeet by four points, as they have in past years.

It is doubtful if one in four American realize this, because of the sensationalistic headlines and news stories, And yet we ought to face the facts. The poor performance of American women drag down the U. S. men—in figuring the total score — again and again Until we can develop female athletes to comnete on equal terms with the Russians, we will go on losing track meets, combined track meets. And, of course, the Russians tell the story to the Russian people in a combined track contest, the score of which was 173 to 169. And that is correct.

The newspaper of each country claim that their country won the recent meet. Of course, this should not be the important thing. Sport competition should emphasize the individuals and their records and not team scores. But the newsmen who always want a lead took care of this matter years ago and have even turned the Olympic Games into something of a contest between national teams, rather than one centered around individuals from all countries, as it was originally.

HOMEMAKERS' ITEMS

Great grandmother used to "feed" wood furniture with oil and then apply a wax. But today, says county home demonstration agent, the protective films of lacquer and synthetic materials used to finish furniture prevent polishes applied to the finish from penetrating into the wood.

So, says the agent, the old theory of wood care is no longer practical. In fact, oil base polishes may cause discolovation or irregular yellowing.

Before a piece of furniture is shipped, the manufacturer may apply a wax to the finish - one containe silicones. Some labels make no reference to such a wax; somdo.

If you have antiques which lack the protective finishes used on most furniture today, you can use a paste wax on scratches and other marks. The paster wax also can be used on old furniture in poor condition. With a finish that is marred from sunlight or extreme temperatures, paste wax will protect the surface and minimize the defects.

When refinishing modern furniture, the silicone type products may pose problems s because of their spedifinc characteristics, such as finish films, Solvents or removers are made especially to help you solve this problem.

Generally, the agent says, remember these rules in taking care of furniture: Prevent exposure to spilled liquids, and guard against scratching the surface. Use paste wax to clean old furniture, but made since 1958 needs only a soft cloth. Remove stickly liquids with a damp cloth and rub dry immediately. If silicone products are being used, remember a little goes a long way.
